INCOM HISTORY

Incom Corporation has been a leading starship designer for nearly two millennia. The company counts the Z-95 Headhunter, the T-16 Skyhopper, and the T-47 Airspeeder as being among the most successful of many profitable starship and vehicle designs.

The T-65 X-wing was the last starfighter developed by Incom Corporation before the Empire seized control of the company. Suspected of being Rebel sympathizers, many members of the X-wing design team were relieved of their duties and questioned extensively by ISB (Imperial Security Bureau) agents. A short time later, in a stunning coup, a Rebel commando team helped the entire Incom X-wing senior design team defect to the Rebel Alliance, bringing with them the all existing T-65 prototypes and production plans and destroying any remaining data-bases. It is not known whether the Empire can recover or reconstruct the lost information.

Incom Corporation was nationalized by direct order of the Emperor. Since that time, Incom has produced few new designs, instead concentrating on aftermarket modifications of existing designs and speciality products for the Imperial Navy. Incom reentered the starfighter market with the release of the I-7 Howlrunner shortly after Grand Admiral Thrawn's campaign, but the company's onetime Rebel sympathies have not endeared 'The New Incom' to skeptical Imperial commanders.

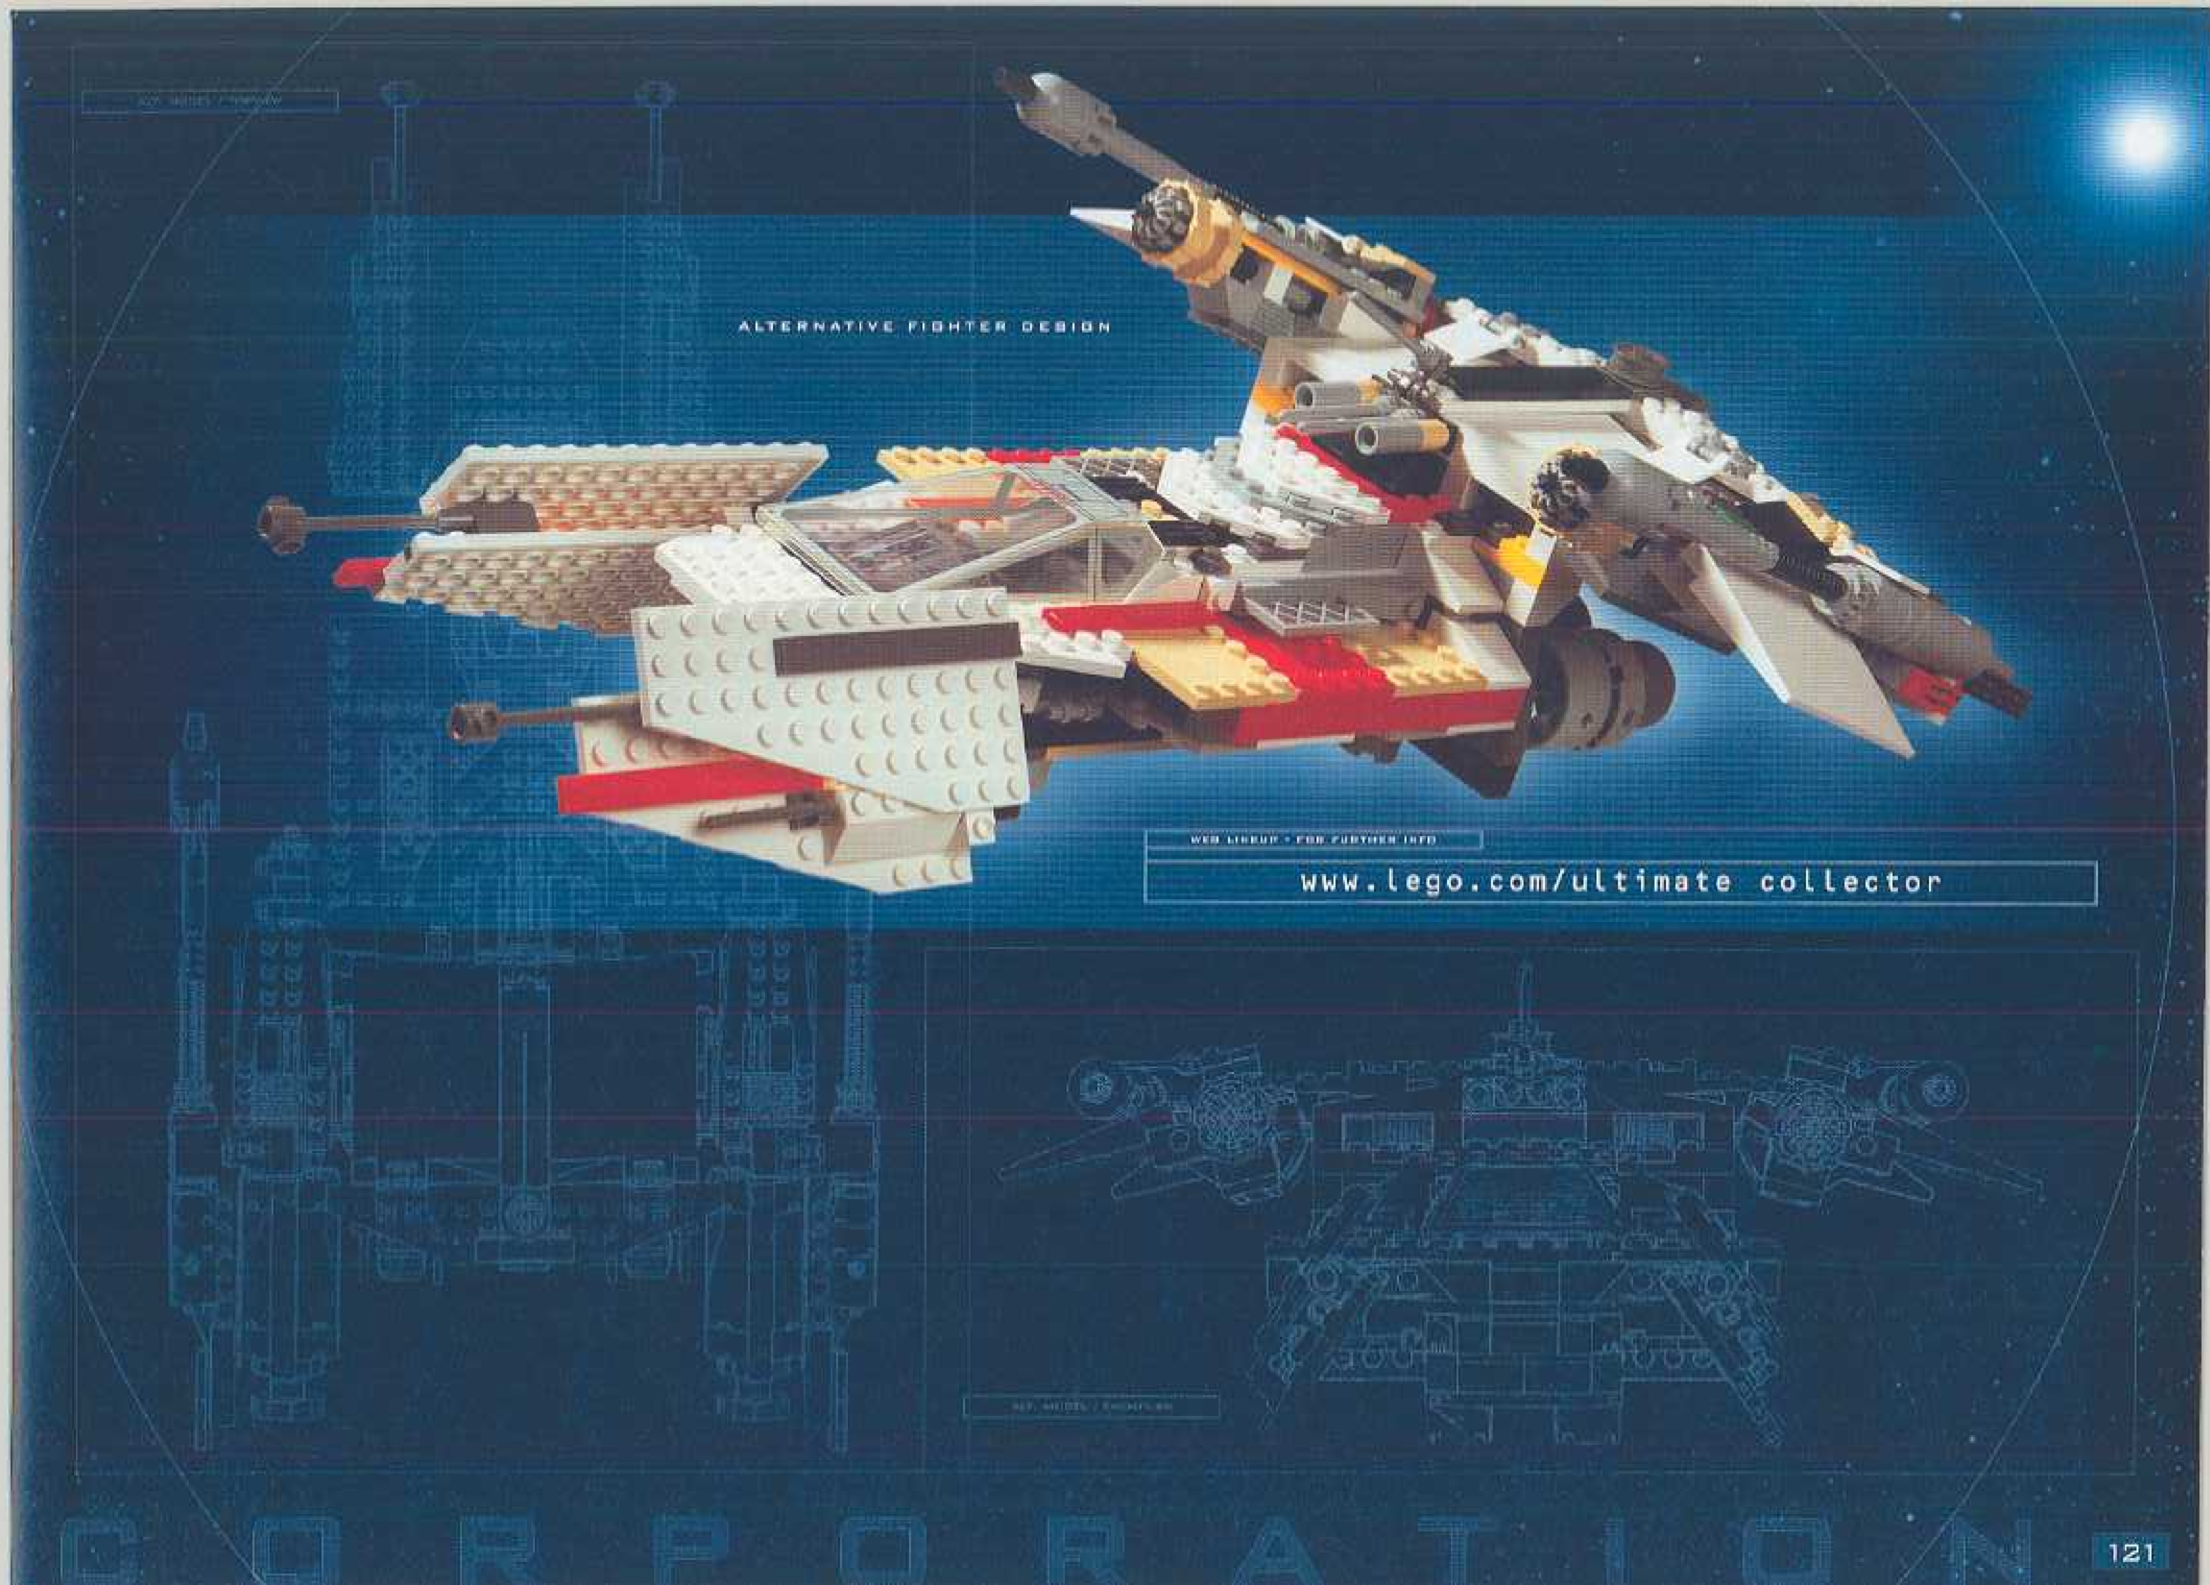

T-65 X-WING STARFIGHTER™ INFO

Incom's T-65 X-wing represents the cutting edge of starfighter performance. Its high speed, heavy firepower, and sophisticated flight and combat systems make it one of the most formidable spacecrafts in existence. Its dominating combat abilities, especially its hyperspace capability, make it a true space superiority fighter.

Each wingtip has a forward-firing, high-powered Taim & Bak KX9 laser cannon. Two Krupx MG7 proton torpedo launchers provide additional punch for use against slow-moving targets. The pilot can angle the X-wing's shields forward or behind for maximum cover. An auxiliary power generator ensures some power for life support, shields, weapons or the sub-space radio even with complete engine failure.

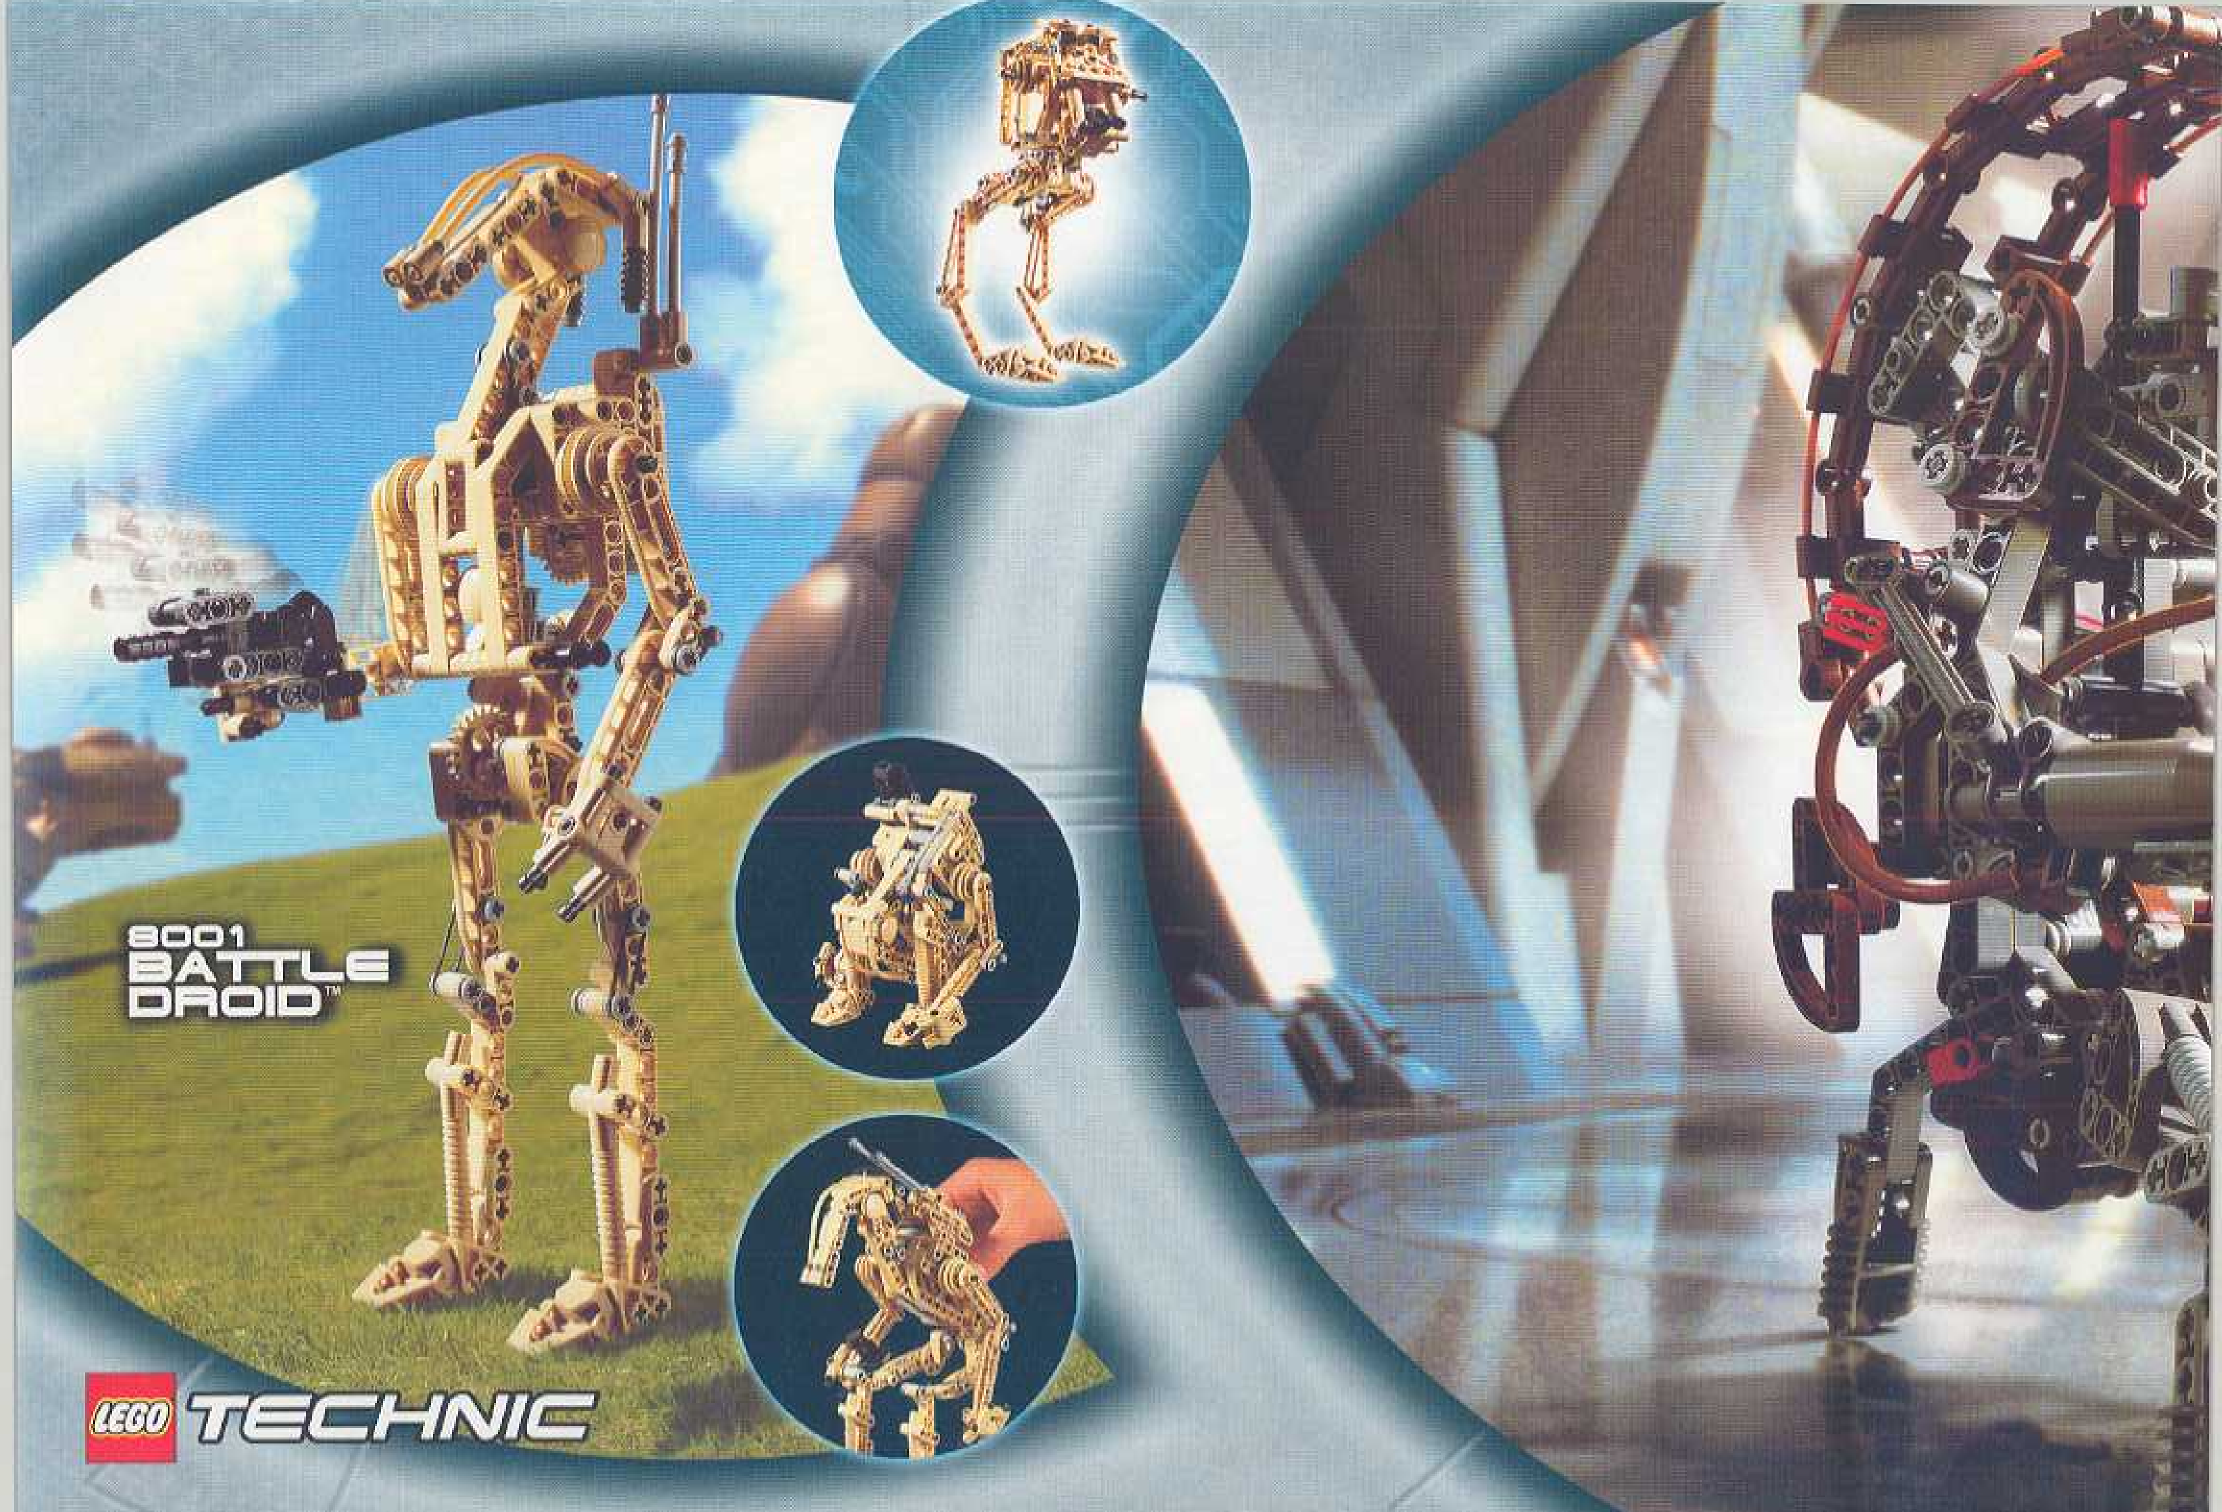

Innovative twin-split-S-foil wing assemblies give the T-65 improved performance in atmospheric flight. In combat, the wings deploy in an "X" position, providing better weapons coverage. The separated engines also improve maneuverability. In either wing configuration, the rapier-thin T-65 presents a very small front and rear profile - making it very difficult to hit.
